Schlage Encode Plus Problems

I Am Upset

I have the Schlage Encode Plus so that I can use AirBnBs smartlock system. However, I noticed a critical design flaw. The numbers on the keypad are not visible until you press a button, then the backlight comes on and illuminates the numbers. However, that first touch is registered as the first digit of the code.

I've had a few guests struggle with this until they finally called me to let them in. They seem to be pressing somewhere random on the keypad to get it to light up, then pressing their code. The keypad, however, is registering all 5 presses as a 5 digit code.

I thought this was going to help streamline check-ins, however it's only made things worse.

We've been using these locks for 5 years now. To eliminate that issue we made sure to have the area illuminated well with a light. So the porch light is always on and set by a timer. Guests have no ability to alter/switch off. This ensure clear visibility to A. The steps when checking at late hours and B. The keypad numbers and light. This is the check-mark home icon button and is the best way to turn the lights on.

This works most of the time. Still had a few issues so I got a small battery light that is motion activated and it is double sided taped above the keypad. This helps more. Amazon to find the one that works for you.

Edit: to say i still love this lock compared to other solutions out there- but yes- the backlight issue 🤔

Thanks for the info. I've never been on the guest side of AirBnB's integrated smart lock check-in, so I don't know what info they are giving the guests. I'll include very detailed instructions, including the HomeKit icon tip. Thanks.

This issue is only an issue with the black finish. I had the black, shared the same frustration as you, returned it and bought the silver finish. Numbers on silver are visible when not illuminated Yeah I see that now. I'll look into the return window. This is just unacceptable. Thanks.
